compatible (where indicated), of benefit to all stakeholders and realistic in light of economic and institutional realities within a given country. Another important outcome will be to create a global community of e-Government leaders who will continue to share experiences, knowledge, and resources with one another following the seminar for the greater benefit of all.

9. Course Content: e-Government is the systematic incorporation and use of Information and Communication Technologies (ICT) government to promote developmental objectives including: improving efficiency and effectiveness; increasing transparency and responsiveness; and enhancing the delivery of government services and information to citizens, businesses, and other stakeholders. This two-week course will include lectures, panel discussions, and interactive workshops presented by leading e-Government experts from USAID, USTTI Board member corporations, private sector firms, universities, NGO's, and multinational organizations. The curriculum will include modules that will address the following aspects of e-Government and focus on what goes into building and operating a functional e-government system:

- e-Government Strategies and Solutions;
- Best Practices and Global Case Studies;
- Service and Information Delivery including paying government fees on-line (licenses, taxes), health and education information, and support for ecommerce;
- Security Considerations including authorization, identity and e-authentication, infrastructure protection, and payment system safeguards;
- e-Procurement;
- E-banking services and other electronic payment systems (mobile banking, pre-paid cards);
- Requirements for systems, support, and maintenance;
- Change Management;
- Enabling Policy Environment including;
- Inter-Ministerial Coordination;
- Policy/Legal/Regulatory Reform;
- Project Financing and Public-Private Partnerships;
